The following incident is probably without precedent, and needs no comment: Shortly before Tyrone Power opened his season at the Princess's with "The Texan," Clement Scott wrote a sympathetic note about the American actor in his weekly dramatic column in the Daily Telegraph. A day or two after the publication of the paragraph Clement Scott was called upon by Tyrone Power's backer, who suggested, without circumlocution, that the critic should give conclusive proof of his kinds feeling towards Mr. Power by advancing $2,500 towards the production. Needless to say, he went away empty-handed, and Mr. Scott subsequently received an apology from Tyrone Power for the extraordinary conduct of his backer.

> Superstitious Victims Never Dared Prosecute Her.

Policeman Edward Keating, of the East Twenty-second street station, proluced a gray-haired and shebuly woman at the Yorkville Police Court this morning, who has the reputation of being a witch. She says she is Mrs. Lizzie Fitzgerald, a widow, fortyeight years old, and lives at 225 East Eleventh street.

According to the policeman the woman s feared by people living on the east side. She robs them and escapes prosecution through their fear of her curse. Two months ago she was caught the rooms of a Mrs. McCarthy, in East Sixteenth street, by Policeman Conroy. At the police station she turned upon the woman whom she had attempted to rob, and who had followed to make a complaint, and made her quake with fear by uttering the threat, "Old Lizzie will send a curse home to you for this." Mrs. McCarthy at once promised no to press the charge and ran out of th station-house. Lizzie was detained for the night, but had to be discharged the following morning in court, as no one appeared to prosecute her. At 5 o'clock last evening Michael Wallace, seventy-five years old, a retired machinist, living on the second floor of machinist, living on the second floor of an apartment-house at 350 East Twenty-first street, heard some one rummaging about his bedroom. He happened to be in the adjoining room at the time. He is a slender, nervous and weak old man, but does not know what fear is.

Throwing open the door that led into the bedroom, he beheld the alleged witch in the act of secreting one of his coats and a pair of trousers underneath he skirt. Lizzie on catching sight of the old man tried at first to frighten him by threatening to bring a curse to him threatening to bring a curse to and his family. The old man did believe in her curses, and sprang w-ats her shutting for help.

He no scouer came within arm's reach of her than she landed a blow on his left eye, and before he could recover himself she selzed his right hand between her testh and bit him severely.
Wallace's cries of pain, as she clong to him with her teeth, soon brought the nelighbors flocking into the room. The woman inen recessed her noid.
Policeman Keating arrived at this juncture, and he arrested Lizzle and refered the old man to go to the station-house to make a complaint.
Some of the superstitious neighbors tried to restrain him from doing so by telling him that he would be accursed.
Wallace told them he was not afraid of her curses, but that he feared her hands

He went to the East Twenty-second street police station, where he lodged his complaint of incenty against Lizzle. As this precinct is without a matron. Lizzle lad to be transferred to the East Thirty-fifth street artion. While the Sergeant was taking her pedigree Liztle's temper began to rise. When Keating told her to come with him to the other station-house she swore that he would not get her there alive.

She then sprang at Keating and tried to claw his face with her nalla. Another policeman was summoned and it required the united strength of the two officers to get the woman to the East Thirty-fifth street station. She had to be carried there in a hand cart. One officer had to hold her down, while the other wheeled her along, followed by an immease crowd of men, women and children.
